Is the smallest continent in the world. What smallest continent. Which is the smallest continent in the world answer.

Africa is the hottest continent on the planet. Antarctica is the largest desert in the world. According to 2017 world population statistics, Oceania has a population of 40,467,040; South America of 426,548,297; North and Central America of 540,473,499; Europe of 739,207,742; Africa of 1,246,504,865; and Asia of 4,478,315,164. Australia is an island since it's surrounded by water but it is also large enough to be considered a continent, which makes Australia the largest island in the world—though technically since the island nation is technically a continent, most ascribe Greenland as the largest in the world. According to the United Nations, Oceania represents a geographic region made up of islands of the Pacific Ocean which includes Australia, Papua New Guinea and excludes Indonesian New Guinea and the Malay Archipelago. After all, the 4,000 researchers on Antarctica only stay through the summer while 1,000 remain through the winter. Additionally, the grouping of Australia and New Zealand is often referred to as Australasia. Additional Information There are seven continents in the world and Asia is the largest, and according to land-mass, Australia is the smallest at almost one-fifth of the size of Asia, but Europe is not far behind as it has just over a million more square miles than Australia. Antarctica is the only continent that does not have an indigenous human population. Asia is the biggest and Australia is the smallest continent. When it comes to population, technically Australia is the second smallest continent. Wait a moment and try again. However, others include New Zealand, Melanesia, Micronesia, and Polynesia as well as the U.S. island of Hawaii and the Japan island of the Bonin Islands in this geographic grouping. Still, Australia is also the largest country without land borders and the world's six-largest country on earth. Quite often, when referring to this southern Pacific region, people will use the term "Australia and Oceania" rather than adding Australia into Oceania. If we exclude Antarctica, then Australia is the smallest, and as a result, we might say that Australia is the smallest populated continent. Australia holds the oldest continental crust on Earth, researchers have confirmed, hills some 4.4 billion years old. Europe is nearly a million square miles larger as the second smallest continent, measuring at a total of 3,997,929 square miles (10,354,636 square kilometers) while Antarctica is the third smallest continent at approximately 5,500,000 square miles (14,245,000 square kilometers). For instance, the United Nations definition which only includes Australia and "unclaimed" independent territories is used for organized international relations and competitions like the Olympics, and since Indonesia owns part of New Guinea, that part is excluded from the definition of Oceania. As a result, if you're judging size compared to population, Australia ranks number two with just over 40 million residents in all of Oceania (which includes New Zealand). It is also the least populous of all the countries. Additionally, it is the largest single country to exist entirely within the Southern Hemisphere—though this accomplishment isn't much considering more than half of the world's country are in the Northern Hemisphere. Listed in order of size are Asia, Africa, North America, South America, Antarctica, Europe, and Australia. These definitions largely depend on the context of their use. Although most of the deserts in Europe are classed as "semi-deserts" and was known as the only continent without deserts. Free 15 Questions 30 Marks 18 Mins The correct answer is Australia. Although it has nothing to do with its size, Australia is also comparatively the driest, most arid continent of the seven, and it also boasts some of the most dangerous and exotic creatures outside of the Amazon rainforest of South America. Keep in mind, though, this number includes the small island nations that surround it in the Pacific Island region of the globe. Antarctica, the least populated continent in the world, only has a few thousand researchers that call the frozen wasteland their home. In terms of land area, the continent of Australia is the world's smallest continent. In total, it includes 2,967,909 square miles (7,686,884 square kilometers), which is slightly smaller than the country of Brazil as well as the contiguous United States. Earth's oldest known piece of continental crust dates to the era of the moon's formation. Something went wrong. The measurement of Australia is just shy of three million square miles, but this includes the major island continent of Australia as well as surrounding islands, which are collectively referred to as Oceania.
